A Legacy of Learning. A Future of Impact.

Shaping a future defined by access, integrity, innovation, and meaningful impact for all Ontarians.

Land Acknowledgement

As leaders in education and in journalism, it is our duty and our commitment to amplify Indigenous stories, perspectives, and issues. TVO wishes to acknowledge all Indigenous people in Ontario and their traditional territories. We acknowledge all those nations that, across the province, have called this land their home on which our headquarters and transmitter offices are based.

A Word From Our CEO

This is TVO's first Impact Report, and it comes at an important moment for both our organization and the province we serve.

For decades, TVO has been making a difference across Ontario. This report gives us an opportunity to tell that story more clearly. Not because our contribution is new, but because its full scope has not always been fully understood.

Today, that story matters more than ever.

Before joining TVO, I thought I had a good understanding of the organization. Like many Ontarians, I knew TVO as an educational broadcaster and a trusted public institution.

What I discovered was something much broader.

Ontarians encounter TVO in many ways. For some, it is the television service they grew up with and still turn to today. For others, it is a documentary that sparks a new perspective, a learning resource used in a classroom, a tutoring session that builds confidence, or a course that opens the door to new opportunities. Across the province, TVO is helping people learn, understand, and engage more fully with the world around them.

Since joining TVO, I have had the opportunity to meet learners, educators, donors, partners, staff, and community leaders across Ontario whose lives have been touched by this organization. Again and again, I have been reminded that the impact TVO has is deeply personal. It creates opportunities. It builds confidence. It helps people overcome barriers. And in many cases, it changes the trajectory of a person's life. Many of the stories in this report are extraordinary. But what struck me most is that they are not isolated examples. They happen every day in classrooms, homes, and communities across Ontario. They are a reminder that public service is not an abstract concept. It is real, tangible, and felt by people where they live.

That is why this report is important.

At a time when technology is transforming how we learn, when access to trusted information has never been more critical, and when education increasingly extends beyond traditional classrooms, TVO's role continues to grow in both relevance and importance.

In many ways, this report is an invitation to see TVO differently.

It is an opportunity to see not only the organization Ontarians have trusted for generations, but also the one we are continuing to build for the future. While this report celebrates the impact we are making today, it also reflects our ambition for what comes next: expanding access to learning, reaching new audiences, investing in innovation, and creating new ways to serve Ontarians across the province.

While our purpose remains unchanged, our ambition for what TVO can contribute to Ontario continues to grow.

My hope is that the stories and evidence in these pages help illuminate not only what TVO does, but the difference it makes in the lives of people across this province.

Pary Bell
CEO, TVO Media Education Group

"The credibility of TVO's media division in the Canadian cultural landscape is significant, and the recognition it receives reflects the quality and relevance of the content that this amazing team produces."

Learning Access & Educational Impact

Students of all ages can access free, curriculum-aligned educational resources through TVO Learn anywhere, any time.

Education: More Than Just a Mandate

Bringing learning within reach

TVO removes barriers to learning so more Ontarians can build skills, gain confidence, earn credentials, and pursue new opportunities. Through free, high-quality, curriculum-aligned resources, we make learning more accessible, engaging, and relevant for learners across the province.

Meeting learners where they are

From the Railway School Car Program teaching rural community students in 1926, to today's digital platforms, TVO's mission to expand access to education has remained constant.

This year, TVO Learn, TVO ILC, and Mathify helped learners strengthen academic skills, continue toward graduation, and get support in ways that fit their needs. From students in remote communities to working adults pursuing new opportunities, TVO's programs helped learners stay on track and take meaningful next steps in their lives.

Trusted support for students, families, and educators

TVO Learn continues to serve as an indispensable public service giving students, families, and educators trusted, curriculum-aligned support from kindergarten to Grade 12, helping reinforce classroom learning, close learning gaps, and support success at home and in school.

The Ministry of Education relies on TVO and our Ontario Certified Teachers to keep these resources current with Ontario's curriculum. As the curriculum is updated or modernized, TVO Learn resources are revised and redesigned, so Ontario teachers, families, and students have the support they need to succeed inside and outside the classroom.

To help students graduate with practical financial skills, TVO was entrusted by the Ministry of Education to develop and administer Ontario's new Grade 10 Financial Literacy Graduation Requirement. Working with TFO (Ontario French-Language Education Communications Authority), EQAO (Education Quality and Accountability Office), First Nations and Métis educational partners, and financial literacy organizations, TVO created accessible, inclusive, and effective resources and assessments for the new requirement.

"It was amazing. I talk about [TVO ILC] whenever anyone mentions TVO. I was able to go to university because I was supported by my assigned teacher and I could complete assignments at my leisure. I felt confident and supported as someone with learning difficulties."

– D.L., TVO ILC student

Removing barriers to credentials

TVO ILC is Ontario's largest online secondary school and the official online educational partner of the Ontario Ministry of Education. This year, it helped more than 21,000 Ontarians continue their education on their own terms. Through flexible, self-paced courses and personalized educator support, learners could earn secondary school credits, work toward their Ontario Secondary School Diploma (OSSD), and take the next step toward post-secondary, career, or personal goals.

As Ontario's sole provider of the Canadian Adult Education Credential (CAEC), TVO ILC also helps adult learners earn a recognized secondary school credential that can support further education, employment, and greater independence.

Building math confidence, one student at a time

TVO Learn Mathify makes personalized math support possible for students who might otherwise go without it. By offering a no-cost alternative to expensive private tutoring, Mathify helps learners in grades 4 to 12 get timely, one-on-one support from Ontario Certified Teachers, build confidence, and feel more prepared to succeed in the classroom.

As one recent student commented:

"TVO Mathify stands out as the best math support platform because it combines expert human help, accessibility, and genuine encouragement into one seamless experience for students. TVO Mathify helps students learn and help build their confidence."

That confidence is the outcome Mathify is designed to build.

Learning continues, even far from home

Mattagami students stay on track during evacuation

When a massive wildfire destroyed thousands of hectares and strayed dangerously close to the town of Gogama, near Timmins, all 200 people from Mattamagi First Nation relocated to a hotel nearly five hours away.

COURTESY OF MATTAGAMI FIRST NATION HIGH SCHOOL

1 Ian Vaithilingam (center) and students from Mattagami First Nation High School blend ILC coursework with land-based activities and community-led support to create a model that honours both learning and identity.

2 Danica, a student from Mattagami First Nation High School, and her mom celebrate Danica's graduation with her OSSD, thanks to the support of her community and TVO ILC.

Despite the uncertainty of the evacuation, Mattagami students were determined to keep up with school.

High School Lead Teacher and TVO ILC Program Facilitator Ian Vaithilingam quickly sourced laptops and set up a makeshift classroom at the hotel. Since Mattagami First Nation already used TVO ILC for some secondary school courses, students could access its online catalogue and continue their studies without delay. The students' dedication to learning and the ease of online courses ensured they didn't lose any learning time while away from home during a difficult period.

The wildfire highlighted the need for an urgent solution, but the need for online school options for Mattagami students is systemic: the community's rural location and funding gaps limit secondary-school options, especially for those students who want to stay in the community.

For Mattagami students, TVO ILC offers more than a way to stay on track when in-person learning is interrupted. It gives them the flexibility to access all the courses they need as they work toward an Ontario Secondary School Diploma while remaining connected to their families and the community they value.

"Mattagami is celebrating two graduates through TVO ILC. In a community of 200 people, two graduates represent an impact that will ripple from one generation to the next."

Telling the Stories That Need to Be Told

Expanding knowledge through trusted storytelling

TVO helps Ontarians make sense of the issues shaping their lives, communities, and futures. Through trusted journalism, current affairs, podcasts, and documentary storytelling, we turn complex issues into accessible public knowledge, amplify diverse voices, and help audiences better understand the world around them.

This year, TVO's new current affairs show, The Rundown, with Jeyan Jeganathan, joined the long-running #onpoli with Steve Paikin and John Michael McGrath, in giving audiences context to participate more fully in civic conversations.

Viewers can't get enough #onpoli. The beloved video podcast's audience continued growing, meeting the demand for clear, Ontario-focused political analysis.

TVO Podcasts

TVO podcasts help audiences examine difficult subjects with context, evidence, and empathy. This year, podcasts such as Arachnid: Hunting the Web's Darkest Secrets and The Oath investigated online exploitation, abuses of power, and systems that failed the people they were meant to protect. Me + Viv, named one of Apple Podcasts Canada's best podcasts of 2026, helped listeners explore how artificial intelligence is reshaping everyday life. Together, these programs helped bring urgent public interest issues into broader public conversation.

TVO Original Documentaries

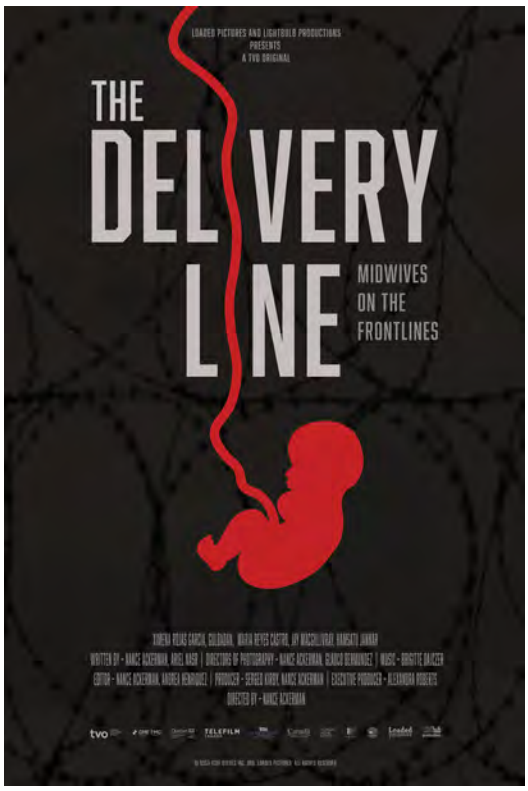

TVO's investment in bold documentary storytelling brings urgent public-interest stories to audiences across Ontario and beyond. Through its focus on feature-length social impact documentaries, TVO helps bring underrepresented perspectives into wider public conversation.

This year, that work was recognized when four TVO Original productions were selected for the official lineup at the 2026 Hot Docs Canadian International Documentary Festival.

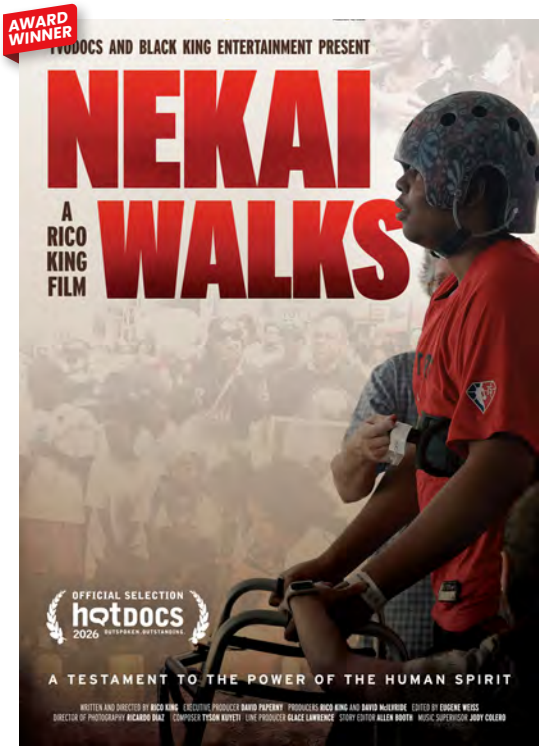

Two of these documentaries were recognized with additional honours at the festival:

Nekai Walks took Hot Doc's top prize with the Rogers Audience Award for Best Canadian Documentary and also received the Hot Docs Docs for Schools Student Choice Award and Saigon Story was awarded Best Canadian Feature Documentary.

Bringing Women's Health Into the Open

Turning overlooked health issues into public knowledge

For too long, women's health concerns have been minimized, misunderstood, or left out of mainstream healthcare conversations. TVO's (MIS)Treated, hosted by award-winning journalist Nam Kiwanuka, helped change that by giving Ontario listeners evidence-based information, personal stories, and expert insight on issues that affect millions of people but are too often discussed in isolation. From menopause and endometriosis to cervical cancer, the Black maternal health crisis, IVF, and the forced sterilization of Indigenous women, the podcast helped audiences see individual experiences as part of broader systemic gaps in healthcare.

For listeners, that combination of information, context, and validation clearly resonated: since its launch in September 2025, (MIS)Treated has reached more than 750,000 plays and 50,000 hours consumed, earned recognition from Apple Podcasts and RTDNA Canada, and drew attention from respected health institutions and advocates. Its impact extended beyond the podcast feed through live events and recordings with Sinai Health Foundation and MaRS, where experts, advocates, and audiences continued the conversation in person.

By bringing science, lived experience, and public-interest journalism together, (MIS)Treated helped listeners feel seen, better informed, and more confident asking questions about their own care while reinforcing the need for greater awareness, understanding, and action.

"(MIS)Treated is putting women's lived health experiences on the public record, alongside the science, so that policymakers cannot claim they did not know."

Trusted Storytelling for the Youngest Ontarians

A safe place to explore, learn, and grow

In a crowded and increasingly commercialized digital environment, TVOkids gives Ontario families something rare: a trusted, ad-free space where children can explore, learn, and be inspired without distraction. As children's programming options shrink, TVOkids remains a vital part of Canadian media, offering award-winning content designed with children's development, curiosity, and school readiness in mind.

For parents and caregivers, that trust matters. They can feel confident that TVOkids programming is free from commercial pressure, anchored in learning, and created to support healthy development while opening the door to shared moments of discovery at home. In this way, TVOkids is more than screen time; it is a public service for families across Ontario, helping children build knowledge, confidence, and a lifelong love of learning in a space made just for them.

Connecting Communities

We inform, educate, and connect with communities across Ontario

As Ontario's public education and media organization, TVO has a responsibility to reflect the province's diversity and help more people feel seen, heard, and connected.

Across our educational resources, journalism, documentaries, kids programming, community events, and partnerships, we create opportunities for Ontarians to learn about one another, see their communities represented, and take part in a shared public conversation. Diversity, equity, inclusion, and belonging are not separate from this work; they shape how we inform, educate, and connect with communities across the province.

That connection happens in different ways: by reflecting families and communities in the stories children watch, by working with diverse teams and filmmakers, by reporting on issues through a province-wide lens, and by inviting Ontarians into shared public spaces where they can engage with TVO directly.

Over the past year, TVO also amplified diverse voices by marking cultural moments such as Pride Month, National Day for Truth and Reconciliation, and National Indigenous History Month. These initiatives did more than acknowledge important dates; by commissioning the work of local Ontario artists, TVO created space for artists to share work rooted in their communities, identities, and lived experiences with audiences across the province.

> "Getting the opportunity to work with TVO meant a lot. I was born and raised in northwestern Ontario and for the longest time TVO was one of the few channels we had. To have my art featured and my story on the network was a very cool full circle moment for me."
> Patrick Hunter, collaborating artist for the 2025 National Day for Truth and Reconciliation campaign

TVO Today Live

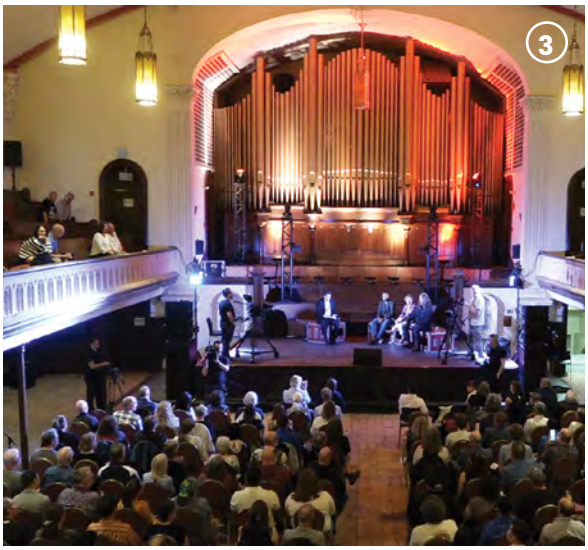

In an age where social media has created an insular world of like-mindedness, the need for a public forum to hear all points of view and ideas grows stronger each day. TVO Today Live has brought critical, civic-focused debates into public venues across the province, facilitating conversations with Ontarians live and in person and with hundreds of thousands more on our broadcast and digital platforms.

By bringing together voices from across the political spectrum, spanning generations and from an array of lived experiences, TVO Today Live connected Ontarians with public figures such as the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, a former leader of her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, a Northern Ontario mayor, and an urban city councilor. Audiences also heard from front-line workers trying to address substance abuse in this province, youth democracy advocates, grassroots activists, Indigenous teachers, and peer counselors. The impact of highlighting these diverse perspectives together is that Ontarians had an opportunity to better understand the issues shaping their communities, fostering informed dialogue and civic engagement across the province.

TVO delivers a much-needed voice of sanity and reason and reveals ways in which every day citizens can get involved." - D.S., viewer of TVO Today Live

Black Student Leadership in Action

Six years of learning, mentorship and Black student leadership

A summer placement can offer a first look inside a newsroom, a chance to explore game development or a conversation with a mentor about what might come next. Since 2021, TVO has provided internship placements through the Toronto District School Board's Black Student Summer Leadership Program (BSSLP), developed by the TDSB's Centre of Excellence for Black Student Achievement. This year, students placed at TVO gained hands-on experience and explored how their existing interests and strengths could connect with work in media and education.

At TVO, the students worked alongside journalists, studio crew, and education professionals, asking questions and applying their talents in new settings. The placements offered practical experience in fields where systemic anti-Black racism and underrepresentation have historically constrained opportunities. The students describe the experience—and what they took from it—in their own words:

"My internship at TVO as an unforgettable opportunity. It pushed me out of my comfort zone and helped me obtain skills I can use in my daily life. I've gained even more clarity and confidence with my post-secondary pursuits."

I.I., BSSLP Participant

"Growing up watching TVOkids and now having the opportunity to complete an internship at TVO is something I'm genuinely proud of. It reminded me of the importance of maintaining a student mindset: always being willing to learn, asking questions, and stepping outside my comfort zone."

Philanthropy at TVO

Donors help bring our public service mission to life

TVO donors open more doors to learning and create opportunities for people to engage with the ideas, issues, and experiences that shape our province. Every gift extends TVO's reach, helping make trusted education, storytelling, and civic dialogue available to more people, in more communities.

TVO's work is powered by thousands of donors, sponsors, and partners who share our belief that education is essential to the well-being and prosperity of Ontarians. Our Philanthropy team builds lasting relationships with supporters, keeping them informed about TVO's programs and the impact of their generosity. Whether someone contributes $5 a month or $100,000 a year and beyond, every gift is deeply valued because it helps us advance our mission to create engaging learning experiences for all.

TVO STAFF

Barry and Laurie Green, longtime champions of education, journalism, and public service media in Ontario, with TVO's Steve Paikin.

TVO tells real, local stories because of the trust we've built with our audiences and the generosity of donors who believe in the power of public media. Audiences help us understand what matters most; donors help turn those insights into programming that informs, reflects, and connects communities across Ontario.

The Barry and Laurie Green Family Charitable Trust has been a committed champion of this work, helping more Ontarians access trusted journalism, arts programming, and stories that reflect the province's full richness and diversity. Through support for Ontario Hubs, Indigenous art, and current affairs programming, the Greens have elevated local creators, amplified underrepresented voices, and strengthened TVO's ability to bring meaningful stories to life.

Our Donors

TVO extends its sincere thanks to the donors whose generosity helps make our work possible. We are honoured to recognize the following supporters who contributed $1,000 or more between April 1, 2025 and March 31, 2026 in support of TVO's educational mission.

TVO Media Education Group

TVO Media Education Group is a registered charity and an agency of the Ontario Ministry of Education that contributes to learning, civic engagement, and public service media across Ontario.

The organization provides free, trusted, and accessible educational content that can support Ontarians of all ages, regardless of background, location, or circumstance.

To fulfill its mandate, TVO delivers curriculum-connected resources through TVO Learn and TVOkids, offers Ontario's largest online high school through TVO ILC, and produces journalism, documentaries, current affairs programming, and podcasts that help Ontarians understand the issues shaping their communities and province.
